

Matthew Piggott graduated from the University of Waterloo in 2009 with a Bachelor of Environmental Studies, Honours Co-Op. Shortly after graduation he began working as the Member Services Coordinator for Grand River CarShare, which is a non-profit carsharing co-operative which provides access to vehicles without the cost, hassle, and pollution associated with traditional car ownership. In his current role he is responsible orienting new members to the co-operative, as well as finding new members who are interested in joining. This involves marketing the co-op, doing community organizing, and employing a wide variety of communication skills. In the future he is interested in working with organizations that work with social justice and environmental issues and particularly where those two movements overlap.